DECANT DESIGN AND PLANNING

July 15, 2015

Andy Rheume, City of Redmond

Andy Rheume has worked in stormwater management for the past 15 years, and is currently the City of Redmond's urban watershed ecologist. Current focuses of his career include studying the performance of bioretention, developing local watershed management plans that target restoration of creeks in urbanized watersheds, alternative approaches to development/redevelopment stormwater requirements, and in-stream effectiveness monitoring of stormwater management techniques. Andy is a Washingtonian native and earned a B.S. in Environmental Sciences from UW.

Bill Dowe, Skagit County

Bill Dowe has been a building code administrator for more than 20 years, and recently joined the Stormwater Permit Program. He likes to tinker with business and construction processes to improve them. A former Building Official with Skagit County, he helped with Skagit County's Street Waste Decant Facility, with final design approval, with construction management and with permitting.

Jon Morrow, City of Ellensburg

Jon is a graduate of the Bellevue Community College and has an Associate's Degree in Science and Engineering. He graduated from the Evergreen State College in 1997 with a Bachelor of Science degree in Hydrology. Jon worked for the Environmental Coalition of South Seattle (ECOSS) as a Stormwater Engineer, for the City of Bothell 2000-2005 as the Stormwater Utility Coordinator, and for the City of Kirkland 2005-2010 as a Stormwater Engineer. Jon is currently the City of Ellensburg's Stormwater Utility Manager.

Justin Twenter, Brown and Caldwell

Justin Twenter is a water resources engineer with Brown and Caldwell. He has more than 14 years of experience in municipal and private stormwater management, including planning, hydraulic/hydrologic modeling, and facility design and construction management. He has recently contributed to the planning, design, and construction management of decant facilities for the City of Redmond, the City of Auburn, and Skagit County.
